DVD Duplicators

DVDRs are used for the storage of data, video, audio and more, despite the current compatibility issues with recordable DVDs.

{bot_wrgoogle}The reproduction of DVD optical media via copying is termed as DVD duplication. Content is duplicated to existing recordable DVD media. The term is used as reference to producing discs in small quantities, as opposed to large-scale replication.

DVD duplicators are also ideal for short run & time sensitive disc duplication work. The new generation of DVD duplicators that we manufacture is of 'dual-format' so now our customers need not worry about the format and media to be used.

Duplication is the standard method in which smaller quantities of DVDs are usually manufactured. The process goes as: first, the DVD is loaded in the burner. Then the information is digitally extracted from the master source (may be a CD-R, CD-RW, DVD-R, DVD-R, DVD+R, or DVD+RW) and then it is transferred to the blank discs. The information then gets verified and the disc is accordingly accepted or rejected.

The processes extract the information from the master source in ditto same manner. Apart from the way a disc is manufactured, another remarkable difference between a replicated disc and a duplicated disc may be the way a disc is printed.

CD & DVD Duplicator helps one to produce copies of one's music and video CDs and DVDs. It is used for fast, cheap and easiest way to get the product to the market, and helps in creating digital videos easily.

It can create 100s of discs in a very less time and is much cheap than expected and is essential for students pursuing a career in music and video field.
